Faith Hill Unable To Perform In "Share The Beat"
Due To Scheduling Conflict

(Omaha, Neb.) – Due to an unforeseen scheduling conflict, Faith Hill will not perform at the "Share the Beat" benefit presented at the Joslyn Art Museum's Witherspoon Hall on Saturday, March 10. Hill's husband, country superstar Tim McGraw, will still be featured in the evening's entertainment which also includes appearances by James Redford and Robert Redford, performances by Phil Vassar, Rivers Rutherford and Alana Grace and celebrity host James Denton.

Presented by The James Redford Institute for Transplant Awareness (JRI) and the University of Nebraska Medical Center, the benefit is being held to promote awareness about the tremendous need for organ and tissue donation. Currently, more than 93,800 Americans are listed on the national transplant waiting list.

JRI was founded by filmmaker Jamie Redford, who received two liver transplants at the Nebraska Medical Center. The nonprofit organization raises awareness about organ and tissue donation through film, educational outreach and its web site: www.jrifilms.org.

The Nebraska Medical Center is home to one of the most well-known solid organ transplant programs in the United States. Its efforts in education, research and clinical medicine have helped shape the growth of the relatively young field of transplantation. With a patient base from across the country and around the world, the Center's state-of-the-art transplant program provides comprehensive treatment for diseases of the kidney, pancreas, liver, small intestine and heart.

Funds raised from "Share the Beat" will support a program that enlists youth ages 12-18 in the creation of animated public service announcements promoting organ donation and educational outreach on the Internet. A portion of the proceeds will also be directed to youth education programs offered through the medical center's organ transplant program.
